

An Integrated Approach to Care

Brookstone Terrace offers a well-planned, integrated program that ensures safety and security for all of our residents. Integration is defined as a method of mixing populations within a residential setting.

We believe in engaging the whole person: body, mind, and spirit. Health and safety are important, of course – but so are curiosity, companionship, fun, and lifelong learning. Our unique assisted living communities cater to the residents, creating an intimate setting that surrounds them with personal care and attention.

Our integrated memory-loss/assisted living program is designed to integrate dementia patients into the daily activities enjoyed by residents with no cognitive impairment. The program includes special care planning, staff training, and admission/discharge criteria. It is often more advantageous to allow dementia residents to live harmoniously with independent residents. Combining a group of dementia residents with those who are independent can lead to a higher quality of life for both groups. Many assisted living residents have a need to fill a void within themselves or to be helpful. Reaching out with a helping hand, in many cases, makes them feel better about themselves. For many residents, it “feels good” to be a humanitarian. Assisted living residents can be helpful in guiding and redirecting a wandering resident. Another assisted living resident might spend time talking or singing with a resident who has mild cognitive impairment.

Our apartments are designed for individuals or couples.
